WIREFRAME · STRUCTURE AND BEHAVIOUR · 5 OCTOBER 2026

Where everything lives

Deliberately plain. This page fixes where things live and how they behave across the whole app, so the visual design can't move them. It starts from landing option 3 (the working prototype) and adds the rest: navigation, Our list, the log, the Kitchen, how ingredients get in, adding a recipe and settings. The numbered notes are the rules each screen has to keep.

Decisions for you

Navigation

Four places on a tab bar at the bottom, in thumb reach. Search sits just above the tab bar on Tonight. Recipe, cook mode and the story are a focused flow: the tab bar goes away, so cooking feels like a different room.

Tonight

Choosing. The home screen.

3 Search and library
4 Filters sheet

Our list

Kitchen

What we have, and what to buy.

10 We have fridge, cupboard, staples
11 Add to kitchen sheet
12 To buy if a shopping list is in v1

Log

What we've cooked, as stories.

9 Our log diary by date and by dish

The focused flow (no tab bar). You can reach it from any place.

5 · Recipe → 6 · Cook mode → 7 · Story → back where you started

Leaving cook mode halfway keeps your place. A "Carry on cooking" bar then sits above the tabs everywhere until you finish or dismiss it.

Settings and household (14) open from your initial at the top right of Tonight. You rarely need them, so they don't get a tab.

How ingredients get in: one Kitchen, five ways in

The Kitchen is the one list of what we have. Everything else reads from it or adds to it. It records have / running low / out, not quantities, because nobody weighs what's left in the bag.

a The box arrives
On Tuesday the Kitchen asks "Is the box in?" One tap adds this week's items, which you can review. Later the Abel & Cole email can do this on its own.

b Add by hand
"+ Add" in the Kitchen opens a search sheet with suggestions. You can add several at once, or paste a list.

c Tonight's With
Picking an ingredient that isn't in the Kitchen asks "Add to the Kitchen too?" It's off by default, because tonight's choice is only for tonight.

d From a recipe
Each ingredient shows whether you have it. Tap a missing one to say "we have it" or "add to buy".

e After cooking
The story's last line asks "Used up anything?" and offers the recipe's fresh ingredients to clear. Ticking a "to buy" item moves it into the Kitchen.

Tonight choosing

Landing option 3, as in the prototype. Only the search position and the tab bar are new.

② Box day (way in a). On Tuesday this asks "Is the box in?", and one tap adds the week's box. Afterwards it shows what came, as here, with Review and undo.
③ Use soon, oldest first. This also orders the With picker. Tapping an item cycles have → running low → out, and swiping removes it.
④ Staples are assumed, so the list stays short. You edit them once, in settings.

Decisions for you

These change where things live, so they need settling before any more visual design.

1 · Navigation model

Recommended: four tabs (Tonight · Our list · Kitchen · Log), with search above the tabs on Tonight. Each thing has one obvious home.

Alternative: keep only the search bar (round 1 Index), with Our list, Kitchen and Log behind a menu. It's calmer, but the Kitchen gets buried, and you'll need it at the fridge.

2 · What the Kitchen tracks

Recommended: have / running low / out, with staples assumed. No quantities.

Quantities ("200 g spinach left") would make "have X of Y" exact, but nobody keeps them up to date.

3 · Shopping list in v1?

If yes, screen 12 is the To buy view in the Kitchen and recipes get "Add to buy". If no, the Kitchen is a single list, and recipes only show have / need.

4 · The box

For now: a Tuesday prompt with last week's box as a checklist. Later: the Abel & Cole email adds it on its own, once the inbox is connected.

5 · Where Add a recipe lives

Recommended: on Our list, because new saves are usually things you want to cook. The share sheet from Instagram is the main way in anyway.
